INTRODCTION

This report outlines findings of the Violence Against Children Survey (VACS) cognitive interview study conducted January 7-11, 2013 in Zomba, Malawi. As part of this study a total of fifty interviews were conducted with twenty interviews conducted in English by researchers from the Questionnaire Design Research Laboratory (QDRL) at the National Center for Health Statistics (NCHS) and thirty interviews conducted in Chichewa by researchers from the Centre for Social Research (CSR) at the University of Malawi. The analytic purpose of the VACS cognitive interviewing study was to provide understanding regarding:

- Feasibility of collecting such data given the sensitivity and age suitability of the questions
- Assurance that meaning of terms and concepts are understood
- Length of the questionnaire
- Ordering of sections
- Length of section introductions
- Ability of respondents to distinguish between types of violence
- Ability of respondents to distinguish specific events

This study was conducted following a similar study conducted in Manila, Philippines in August 2012. The study in Manila had a number of key findings which included: a need to reduce the questionnaire length, a reorganization of the question ordering, and the importance of utilizing clear and concise wording. Specific recommendations that came out of the Philippines study included:

- Eliminating repetitive questions
- Increasing the use of skip patterns to ensure that only relevant questions are administered to each respondent
- Rewording questions to make them easier to administer
- Reducing section introductions
- Improving clarity of questions to ensure that respondents understand the concepts that are being asked about to decrease false positives and underreporting
- Revising the wording of questions to ensure that the topics being asked about are unambiguous and conveyed in a concise manner

As a result of these findings, a number of changes were made before the questionnaire was tested in this study. These changes included:

- Increased use of Skip Patterns: This change was implemented to ensure respondents were asked only relevant questions. In earlier versions, all respondents were asked if they had received various injuries as a result of the violence they experienced, but in the version utilized in Malawi only respondents who answered that they had received injuries were asked what types of injuries they received. This change worked well to reduce the length of interviews and also ensured that the respondent only received relevant questions.
- Rewording of Questions: The version of the questionnaire utilized in Malawi reduced ambiguous language in a number of questions relating to sexual activities. In previous versions, questions regarding sexual behavior asked respondents if they had engaged in “sexual intercourse”, while the version used in Malawi asked, “Have you ever had vaginal, oral, or anal sex?” This change did improve respondents’ understanding of the topics being discussed; however, this change caused a number of respondents to feel embarrassed likely due to cultural sensitivities surrounding sex.
- Reorganization of Questionnaire
 - Question Ordering: Changes in question ordering were implemented to ask all filter questions as part of a series, rather than asking a filter question and immediately asking all the follow up questions. This change is best exemplified in question F39, where respondents are asked all questions about witnessing physical violence in a series, and then each yes answer is then followed up on. Unfortunately, this change did not work as anticipated and resulted in confusion for respondents during the follow up questions.
 - Placement of Sensitive Questions: The questionnaire was also reorganized to place more sensitive questions at the end of the questionnaire. This reorganization allowed interviewers to establish a rapport with the respondent that could be relied upon in more sensitive questions. Given that sensitive questions increase the risk of a break off in the interview, placing the more sensitive questions towards the end of the questionnaire minimizes the impact that break offs will have data collection. This change was implemented to conform to best practices for survey research and did not have a negative impact on the interviews.

In addition to the goals initially established for the cognitive interview study as a whole, several additional research questions were posed for the cognitive interview study in Malawi specifically. These additional research questions included 1) determining how the more use of more explicit language in the definition of sexual activities affected respondents and 2) determining how the structural changes made to the questionnaire altered respondents' understanding of the questions.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

1. Questionnaire Length

One of the research questions of this study was to determine the impact of questionnaire length on the survey and the resulting data. Prior to the Malawi study, substantial changes were made to the questionnaire to drastically reduce its length. These changes included removing questions, reducing the number and length of section introductions, and the implementation of more skip patterns.

Despite the reduction of the questionnaire, the cognitive interviews varied in length between 45 and 120 minutes. After the first day, we were forced to scale back the amount probing conducted and prioritize certain sections and questions in order to ensure that interviews lasted no longer than 90 minutes. Interviewers frequently noted that respondents drifted off or lost focus at various points throughout the survey. It should be noted that a cognitive interview is unique from a standardized survey interview given that in a cognitive interview interviewers ask additional follow up probes that are not included in the questionnaire itself. While this probing allows us to gain additional information essential in the evaluation of the survey questions, it also adds length to the interview compared with a standard survey interview.

One strategy that was implemented in both the Philippines and Malawi studies to reduce the questionnaire length was the reduction of section introductions. While section introductions can provide important information and useful transitions between topics, when lengthy or frequent section introductions are used this can have a negative impact on data quality. Introductions that contain examples can unintentionally cause respondents to focus on the scenarios or topics mentioned in the examples. Additionally, warning respondents that particular topics are considered sensitive can result in a heightened awareness of the sensitivity of the information being provided. In the Philippines and Malawi studies, some limited transitions between sections were retained to provide important information to respondents and to convey reassurances regarding the confidentiality of the information being collected.

2. Suitability of Potentially Sensitive Content

An issue that proved challenging in Malawi was the sensitivity surrounding sexual topics both in English and Chichewa. This problem occurred primarily with younger respondents, but also with a couple of older respondents. Throughout all of the questions regarding romantic partners and sexual activities there was a number of respondents who refused to discuss the topics at any length. This issue arose in more sensitive questions such as questions about sexual behaviors and abuse (F400, F700-F1000), as well as in questions that would not traditionally be considered as sensitive such as relationship status or gender attitudes. For example, when respondents were asked if they had a romantic partner, a number of respondents became embarrassed and refused to answer the survey question. Additionally, a number of respondents explained that they were too young to have a partner and did not discuss this any further. When respondents got to the F34 series of the gender attitudes section, one respondent stated, “I have never done this and I am not there when people are doing it.” A different respondent asked, “How would I know, I’m just a kid?” This issue became clearer in the sexual behavior and sexual abuse sections when respondents would refuse to answer questions. One such respondent hid their face when she was asked about sexual contact.

Similarly, interviewers noted that this issue became apparent as respondents became shy and reserved or simply refused to answer the survey questions. Even in cases where the respondent felt comfortable enough to answer the survey questions, respondents became visibly embarrassed when they were asked to define or explain their understanding of sex. Interviewers also noted that the repeated use of the definition of sex in the sexual abuse questions, as well as in the follow up questions, was uncomfortable and awkward, but also felt that it distracted respondents from the question.

3. The Impact of Interviewers

The impact of interviewers on data collection was observed in this study. The topics covered in the VACS questionnaire sometimes prompted respondents to edit their answers. The most glaring example of this is exhibited by the fact that no Chichewa respondents reported having sex to a Chichewa speaking interviewer. Additionally, no Chichewa respondents reported that anyone had tried to make them have sex but not succeeded (F800), that anyone had ever physically forced them to have sex (F900), or that anyone had pressured them in a nonphysical way to have sex (F1000) to a Chichewa speaking interviewer. On the hand, several English speaking respondents did report to their English speaking interviewer that these types of events had occurred. This reporting difference may be an artifact of interviewer demographics.

Aside from the generic impact of interviewers, there were other factors specific to this study that could have caused these effects. One such factor is the impact of interviewer gender, which has been known to have an impact on respondents’ answers. All Chichewa interviewers for this study were male, but for English interviews the majority of respondents were paired with an interviewer of the same gender. This could have resulted in female respondents feeling uncomfortable discussing sensitive topics with a male. Another potential factor is the fact that all of the English interviews were conducted by American interviewers. Given that the topic of sexual activities is a particularly sensitive topic in Malawian culture, respondents may have spoken more freely with English interviewers due to the fact that they are an “outsider” to Malawian culture. Additionally, it should be noted that at times there were communication difficulties between the interviewer and respondent due to language barriers. While all of the respondents did speak English, some of the respondents did not speak English well enough to fully express themselves to fully engage in a cognitive interview.

4. Question Ordering

A number of changes were made to the question order from previous versions of the questionnaire. One change that was problematic in the Malawi study was the grouping of similar filter questions, which were then followed up with additional questions about each topic (See the sexual abuse sections:F700, F800, F900, and F1000 for the best example). This was a difficult cognitive task for respondents who reported experiencing more than one form of violence in a particular series. Respondents were first asked a series of related questions and then asked to follow up on each topic, rather than moving straight from a filter question to the applicable follow up questions. A number of respondents in both languages struggled to determine which topic was being asked about during the follow up questions. This led to respondents frequently asking for clarification on what topic was being discussed and to misreporting of information as a result of this confusion. Based on this experience, we recommend that each stem question should be directly followed by all applicable follow up questions.

While this specific change was unsuccessful, other changes and improvements made to the questionnaire were found to be successful. One example of this was the movement of more sensitive questions to the end of the survey. This allowed interviewers to build a sense of rapport with the respondent that could then be utilized when more sensitive questions were being administered.

5. Understanding of Key Terms and Concepts

Generally, Malawi respondents did not have difficulty understanding key concepts. There were a few terms or phrases that respondents did not understand, such as charred skin or spanking, but overall respondents had little difficulty understanding the questions.

While comprehension of concepts was not a widespread problem, respondents did have some difficulty understanding concepts that were being asked about for a few of the questions. For example, one consistently problematic question, in both English and Chichewa, was question F1303 in the mental health section. Respondents frequently noted that they were unable to distinguish between the phrases used in the F1303 series. Another issue that arose was confusion over what constitutes touching someone in a sexual way. For example, a few male respondents reported that female friends had done things like massaging the respondents' chest and shoulders. The respondents felt that this constituted someone touching them in a sexual way; however, based on the current question it is unclear if this should be reported. In another question there was some confusion over what constituted pressuring someone in a nonphysical way to have sex. For example, a few male respondents stated that they had received peer pressure from their friends to engage in sexual activities; however, these respondents wanted to wait until they were married to have sex. Based on the current wording of the question (F1000), it is unclear if this scenario should be reported in this question. Finally, there was some confusion about what constituted being forced to watch pornography in question F600a. One respondent reported that he had been forced to watch pornography because his friends had pressured and encouraged him to watch. Other respondents reported similar experiences, but did not feel that this constituted being forced to watch pornography. Ultimately, these kinds of inconsistencies in the understanding of such key concepts lead to inaccurate reporting.

6. Respondents' Ability to Distinguish Between Events

An individual's level of experience with violence influences the degree to which they can provide an accurate answer. For some respondents, this may be difficult to impossible to recall. Respondents who had frequently experienced violence and respondents who had experienced violence a number of years in the past had difficulty recalling details about specific instances of violence. For example, respondents who had experienced a large number of instances of physical violence over an extended period of time often had difficulty distinguishing between instances of violence. Additionally, respondents who had experienced violence more than a few years in the past as well as respondents who had experienced extensive violence had difficulty recalling specific details about the event, such as the age when the violence occurred or whether they had received injuries from a specific instance of violence. While some changes were implemented from earlier versions of the questionnaire, it is likely impossible to completely eliminate these issues and given this the data collected from respondents who are recalling events from several years in the past or respondents who have experienced extensive amounts of violence may have underlying issues.

7. Physical Violence vs. Punishment

Respondents' make judgments as to whether violence that they have experienced is or is not justified. Violence that the respondent deemed to be justified was not reported. As a result, a pattern that came to light during our analysis was the fact that a large number of respondents interpreted some of the physical abuse questions as asking about punishment. This was observed particularly in question F147a which asks, "Has a parents or other adult relative ever: punched, kicked, whipped, or beat you with an object?" While the question assumes that violence is always unjustified, not all respondents make the same assumption. One respondent explained, "... this is violence but a way of making us behave better." Additionally, when asked in question F35 whether they viewed physical punishment as being acceptable a number of respondents reported that they felt this was an acceptable form of punishment. Ultimately, the view that certain instances of violence are justified, could lead respondents to under report their experience with violence.

8. Translation Issues

Prior to the first day of interviewing, the complete questionnaire was reviewed to ensure that the Chichewa translation of the instrument matched the English version as closely as possible. While a few issues were detected and corrected, a few additional translation issues were discovered once the questionnaire was administered to respondents. A problem was deemed to be a translation or language issue if there were differing understandings of a word between respondents who received the questionnaire in Chichewa and those who received the questionnaire in English. One issue that arose with a few questions was that respondents had difficulty differentiating because questions and reported that the questions were asking the same thing. This issue arose in questions F9 and F10, as well as the mental health series (F1303). Additionally, question F33e discusses the ramifications of a wife preparing "bad food". In Chichewa, respondents interpreted this as meaning that the food was improperly prepared or undercooked; however, respondents who completed the questionnaire in English did not have these interpretations. These issues underscore the importance of having country specific researchers reviewing the questionnaire, but also conducting small pilot or cognitive interviewing studies to fully detect these issues.

METHODOLOGY

This section details the methodology used for this specific study as well as a general description of cognitive interviewing methodology.

Cognitive Interviewing

The aim of cognitive interviewing study is to investigate how well survey questions perform when asked of respondents, that is, if respondents understand the questions according to their intended design and if they can provide accurate answers based on that intent. As a qualitative method, the primary benefit of cognitive interviewing is that it provides rich, contextual insight into the ways in which respondents 1) interpret a question, 2) consider and weigh out relevant aspects of their lives and, finally, 3) formulate a response based on that consideration. As such, cognitive interviewing provides in-depth understanding of the ways in which a question operates, the kind of phenomena that it captures, and how it ultimately serves (or fails) the scientific goal. Findings from a cognitive interviewing project typically lead to recommendations for improving a survey question, or results can be used in post-survey analysis to assist in data interpretation.

Traditionally, cognitive testing is performed by conducting in-depth, semi-structured interviews with a small sample of approximately twenty to forty respondents. The typical interview structure consists of respondents first answering the evaluated question and then answering a series of follow-up probe questions that reveal what respondents were thinking and their rationale for that specific response. In this regard, cognitive interviews unfold within a narrative format and are often personal and, in comparison to traditional survey interviews, are unique to each respondent. Through this semi-structured design, various types of question-response problems, such as interpretive errors or recall accuracy, are uncovered—problems that often go unnoticed in traditional survey interviews. By asking respondents to provide textual verification and the process by which they formulated their answer, elusive errors are revealed.

As a qualitative method, the sample selection for a cognitive testing project is purposive. Respondents are not selected through a random process, but rather are selected for specific characteristics such as gender or race or some other attribute that is relevant to the type of questions being examined. When studying questions designed to identify persons with disabilities, for example, the test sample would likely consist of respondents with a previously known disability and, to discover potential causes of false positive or false negative reporting, some respondents with no known disability. Because of the small sample size, not all social and demographic groups are represented. Analysis of cognitive interviews does not produce generalizable findings in a statistical sense, but rather, provides an explicit exploration of response processes including patterns of interpretation which could lead to response error.

Analysis of cognitive interviews can be conducted from transcribed interviews or, as is often the case, from interviewer notes. The texts of the interviews (either transcribed materials or interviewer notes) are collated by question so that comparisons can be made systematically across all respondents. Several levels of analysis can typically be performed. First, distinct occurrences in which respondents experience difficulty or confusion while answering are identified. Additionally, specific instances or patterns of error are also noted and, most importantly, the particular causes of those errors are identified. In addition to response errors, analysis of cognitive interviews can be conducted to reveal patterns of question interpretation. By comparing each respondent's interpretation to a particular question, patterns can be identified and then examined for consistency and degree of variation among respondents. This type of interpretive analysis does not necessarily illustrate overt response errors, but rather provides deeper insight into the substance or the actual meaning that constitutes the survey data.

VACS Cognitive Interview Study Methods

A total of fifty interviews were conducted for this project with twenty interviews conducted in English by researchers from the Questionnaire Design Research Laboratory (QDRL) at the National Center for Health Statistics (NCHS) and thirty interviews conducted in Chichewa by researchers from the Centre for Social Research (CSR) at the University of Malawi.

Individuals between the ages of 13 and 23 living in Zomba District were eligible to participate in the study. Respondents were recruited and screened for eligibility by Research Assistants from CSR. In order to capture respondents with a broad range of experience, 80 percent of respondents lived in villages around Zomba City, while 20 percent of respondents lived in Zomba City. Additionally, 60 percent of respondents recruited for the study were under the age of 18 in order to assess of the suitability of the VACS content for this age range. Table 1 shows the breakdown of respondent ages by the language in which the interview was completed. In order to recruit respondents who could speak English well enough to complete the cognitive interview, the majority of respondents interviewed in English were over age 18, while respondents who were interviewed in Chichewa were younger. Table 2 shows the breakdown of respondent age by sex. Given that one focus of this study was to evaluate the language used in the survey for younger respondents, a total of 30 respondents (evenly divided between sexes) under age 18 were recruited. Twenty respondents over the age of 18 were recruited and the sample was evenly divided between males and females.

Additional demographic information was not formally obtained in order to minimize the collection of personally identifiable information in order to ensure that the risk to participants was minimal; however, some additional demographic information was obtained as part of the questionnaire. Thirteen respondents reported that they had had a boyfriend or girlfriend, while five respondents reported that they had had sexual intercourse.

Respondents were recruited for this project by CSR which distributing flyers to primary and secondary schools in the area, as well as at Chancellor College. CSR also travelled to the villages surrounding Zomba and spoke with parents of potential respondents to provide additional information about the study. Interview dates were scheduled and respondents were provided transportation to the interview location. The average interview lasted approximately 70 minutes and all interviews were limited to 90 minutes. Respondents received 3,500 Kwacha (approximately $11 USD) for their participation. Additionally, as a result of changes made following the VACS Philippines Study, the full VACS questionnaire was administered for this study. A copy of the questionnaire utilized can be found in Appendix A.

Method of Analysis

Analysis of interviews includes a three stage process involving data reduction and theory building (i.e. drawing conclusions). A data entry and analysis software application (Q-Notes) was used to conduct analysis. Q-Notes, developed by the Question Design Research Laboratory, ensures systematic and transparent analysis across all cognitive interviews as well as provides an audit trail depicting the way in which findings are generated from the raw interview data. Without such an analysis, conclusions presented in cognitive interview reports can, without the reader's knowledge, consist of anecdotal reports derived from one or two standout interviews or the general impressions of interviewers.

To conduct analysis for the VACS study, original interview text from every interview was first summarized into detailed interview notes. Summary notes specified the way in which individual respondents answered every survey question, including each respondent's interpretation of questions and key terms, activities and experiences considered by respondents, and any response difficulties and errors. Next, analysis was conducted systematically across interviews, identifying interpretive patterns (including patterns of response errors) across interviews. Findings from this second level of analysis depict the phenomena captured by each question and allows for the assessment of construct validity. The final stage of analysis involves examination of themes by specific subgroups. Identifying the presence of specific patterns occurring only within in a particular subgroup (e.g. girls vs. boys) can signal potential bias in resulting survey data.

QUESTION BY QUESTION REVIEW

This section presents an in depth analysis of questions from the VACS Malawi questionnaire. Some questions have been omitted from this analysis, as interviewers were only able to probe on a limited number of questions due to time constraints for the cognitive interviews. Additionally, in some instances a series of questions have been grouped together to allow for a more cohesive discussion given the relationship between the questions.

F7 How much do you feel connected or close to other students? A lot, A little, Not very much, Not at all?

In order to answer this question, respondents had to interpret what it means to feel "connected or close" to other students. Respondents ultimately interpreted this phrase broadly. In discussing their understanding of the phrase "connected or close to other students" respondents mentioned talking with friends, helping others, and behaviors to explain their understanding of this phrase.

Respondents frequently mentioned talking or chatting with their friends to describe how connected they feel. One respondent who said that she felt a little connected to other students explained that she said only a little because she doesn't like chatting with others. Another respondent who answered "a lot" explained that he feels close to other students because he can talk to other students about problems. Some respondents stated that they discuss personal problems with other students, while other respondents reported that they only discuss school related topics with other students. Despite this distinction, it did not seem to have any impact on the response option that respondents ultimately selected.

In explaining their answer, respondents frequently mentioned giving or receiving help from other students. One respondent who answered “a lot” explained she felt this way because the students help each other out by providing pens or pencils when other students are in need. This respondent also explained that when one student is sick the students come together as a group to visit the sick student. Another respondent explained their answer by saying, “We rely on each other and get support from others.”

A number of respondents who answered “not very much” explained that they felt this way because the people at their school had “bad behavior”. One respondent explained, “Some students have defiant behavior, bad behaviors.” Another respondent explained that the students at her school cursed and that she is no longer friends with them.

F8 How much do you talk to friends about important things?

Respondents' interpretations of the phrase “important things” varied between respondents; however, all of these interpretations focused on topics related to either education or personal problems. For example, one respondent explained that important things meant “family trouble or academic problems”. Another respondent defined important things as “education and future plans and lifestyle”.

F9 How much can you count on friends for support?

Respondents varied greatly in their interpretation of the words support, though respondents generally felt that they could count on their friends for support. In explaining the support that they could count on their friends for, respondents discussed academics, monetary or tangible gifts, and other intangible benefits. One example of a respondent who interpreted support in terms of academics said, “When I have no pen, my friends lend me one and they always come to my assistance.” Another respondent mentioned that she felt that she could rely on her friends in “academic matters” because they share reading materials and textbooks and study together for exams.

Several respondents also mentioned that they felt they could rely on their friends for money, food, clothes, or other tangible items when they were in need. One respondent explained that she though support meant buying clothes or giving food. Another respondent explained that they help each other out with “necessities”.

Additionally, a number of respondents explained that they feel they can rely on their friends for a number of intangible forms of support, such as advice or being able to discuss problems in their lives. For example, one respondent explained that he friends had helped her when she was having difficulty with her boyfriend. Another respondent said that they “go to their friends for advice”.

A number of Chichewa respondents also reported difficulty answering this question. Some respondents felt that this question was asking the same thing as the previous question. Several respondents needed to have the question read to them multiple times and were ultimately unable to answer the question. .

F10 Have you ever worked for money or any other form of payment?

While the majority of respondents stated that they had never engaged in any type of work and were easily able to answer this question, other respondents had more difficulty due to confusion over what counted as work. During probing on the definition of work, a number of respondents differentiated between full time employment and “piece work”, or ad hoc, part-time work that someone does from time to time. A number of respondents indicated that they would not include “piece work” in their answer to this question. This is best exemplified by a respondent who says that he works in people’s gardens as a side. Other respondents did report this type of work in their answer to the question. For example, one respondent says that he works on cell phones occasionally in order to help him buy educational materials such as books and pens.

In addition to part-time or “piece work”, some respondents reported that they worked on a more regular basis. One respondent explained that they had taught social studies at a local secondary school. Another respondent reported that he is a “builder” and does plumbing and construction work on people’s homes in order to get money for educational needs and to buy clothing.

F11a Have you ever... Begged for alms?

A number of respondents reported that they did not know the word “alms”. This issue was particularly apparent in English interviews, but was also noted in some Chichewa interviews. In order to answer the question, respondents usually focused on begging in order to answer the question. One English respondent explained that the question was asking, “Have you ever begged from outsiders?” Other respondents explained that this question was asking about any type of begging done on the street.

F11b Have you ever... Sold items on the street?

A number of respondents indicated that they had or were currently selling items on the side of the road. The majority of respondents who answered yes to this question explained that this was something they had done when they were younger. Respondents reported that they had sold food such as mangos, corn, fish, or mandas.

F13 Now, I would like to ask you some questions about your biological parents, your natural parents who gave birth to you. Is your biological mother living with you?

The majority of respondents had no difficulty answering this question; however, several students who are attending college away from their home reported that they still live with their parents. One respondent explained this by saying that even though she is away at college, her mom’s house is what she considers to be home. Another respondent explained that the house where his parents live is what he considers to be his home, even though the respondent acknowledged that he only goes home for holidays.

While answering this series of questions, a fifteen year old respondent whose mother had died two years began sobbing during the interview. The respondent explained that this series of question about his mother reminded him of her and the he missed her “so much”. It should be noted that questions regarding respondents’ parents may be particularly emotional for some respondents if traumatic events relate to their parents.

F14 How old were you when you last lived with her?

Respondents who said that they had last lived with their mother at various ages ranging from five to sixteen. One respondent was unable to recall exactly how old they were the last time they lived with their mother and simply said “very small”. Another respondent recalled that his mother died in 2001, and he did the math to calculate that he was 9 years old when his mom died.

F16 Is your biological mother still alive?

F17 How old were you when she died?

F18 How close do you/did you feel to your biological mother? Would you say very close, close, not close, or never had a relationship with her?

Respondents discussed a broad range of reasons why they do or do not feel close to their mother. In discussing their answers, respondents mentioned a variety of topics. These topics can be broken down into issues around parental responsibilities and emotional connections.

A common theme that emerged among respondents who indicated that they felt close to their mother and among respondents who said that they weren’t very close to their mother was mentioning that their mother ensures that their basic needs, such as providing food and clothes, were met. One respondent who was explaining why she felt very close to her mother stated that her mother buys her all the necessities including clothes and books. Another respondent who also answered that he felt very close said, “I go to school and she keeps food for me and gives me all I need.” Respondents also mentioned basic needs in discussing why they didn’t feel as close to their mother. This generally emerged when a respondent discussed basic needs that were not met, for example one respondent said that they answered close rather than very close because their mother is unable to help them pay their school fees.

Another pattern emerged exclusively in Chichewa interviews when discussing this question was that respondents mentioned completing household chores as a way of showing their connection to their mothers. One respondent said, “I can say I am very close to my mother because I help her with household chores willingly and almost as a matter of routine.” Interestingly, all respondents who mentioned completing household chores said that they feel “very close” to their mothers.

A number of respondents also mentioned being able to discuss problems or issues as an explanation of how close they are with their mothers. For example, one respondent cited their ability to get advice on “critical personal decisions” as one reason that they felt very close to their mother. Another respondent mentioned that their inability to speak with their mother about some topics was a reason that they described their closeness to their mother as “close” rather than “very close”.

One theme that appeared less frequently was the topic of discipline and its connection to how close respondents feel to their mothers. Respondents mentioned this topic in discussing reasons why they do not feel particularly close to their mother. For example, one respondent mentioned that he doesn’t feel too close to his mother because she often rebukes him even on “the most trivial mistakes”.

Another theme that appeared less frequently was the explanation that respondent’s felt that their mothers taught them life lessons. For example, one respondent when asked why they consider themselves to be close to their mother said, “Because I want someone to teach me what is bad or good and she does this.”

F19 Is your biological father living with you?

F20 How old were you when you last lived with your father?

A majority of respondents reported that they do not live with their fathers. A number of respondents had difficulty pinpointing exactly how old they were the last time they were when they last lived with their father. This was particularly problematic among respondents who were young when they stopped living with their father.

F21 What was the main reason you stopped living with him?

The majority of respondents who reported not living with their father reported that their father had died. Other respondents explained that their parents had separated or gotten divorced or stated that they were sent away for school.

F22 Is your biological father still alive?

F23 How old were you when he died?

This question was a bit problematic for some respondents who reported that their fathers had died. Several respondents stated that they had already answered this question (F21), but other respondents noted that their fathers stopped living with them before they died. For example, one respondent stated that his father died when the respondent was nine years old, but stated that his father had stopped living with them at age eight because he was in the hospital.

F24 How close do you/did you feel to your biological father? Would you say very close, close, not close, or never had a relationship with her?

Generally, respondents indicated that they were not as close with their father as they were with their mother; however, some of the same topics (parental responsibilities and emotional connections) that were mentioned when discussing how close respondents feel to their mother (F18) emerged in discussing this question

One of the themes that overlapped with the previous question was the discussion of how the respondents' fathers provided or did not provide basic needs to the respondent. For example, one respondent said that she felt that she was close to her father because he met her "basic needs of everyday life". Another respondent said that he did not feel very close to his father because he does not live with his father, but said that he did feel close to his father because his father buys him clothing and other school necessities. Similar to how respondents discussed their relationship with their mothers, some respondents discussed basic needs to explain why they do not feel close to their fathers. For example, one respondent said that he felt close, rather than very close, to his father because sometimes his father "declined to provide" his basic needs. Another respondent said that she was not close to her father because he could not provide for "the daily basic needs".

Another topic that overlapped with respondents' discussions about their relationships with their mothers was the ability to talk with their father. A number of respondents said that they felt that they could tell their fathers anything, while another respondent said, "When I have secrets, I tell my dad. I don't tell my mother." Some respondents also cited their inability to talk with their fathers as a reason that they did not feel close to their father. One example of this comes from a respondent who said, "We are not able to sustain a conversation for a very long time." Another respondent explained that she answered "close", rather than "very close", because she cannot talk to him about everything like she does with her mother.

One topic that emerged when respondents were discussing their relationship with their fathers that did not emerge when discussing their relationship with their mothers was the impact of their fathers' drunkenness. One respondent explained that he was close to his father; however, the respondent explained that it was a problem when he got drunk because he could "beat up everyone". Another respondent stated that they were not close to their father because he usually comes home after the respondent goes to bed and that he is often drunk when he comes home.

F29 Have you ever lived together with someone as if you were married?

While most respondents had no difficulty with this question, a few respondents had difficulty understanding this question in English. In one instance, the respondent did not know what the question was asking, so the interviewer attempted to help the respondent understand the question by asking if he had ever cohabitated with anyone. The respondent said yes because he was currently living with a roommate. Another respondent when asked to explain what this question was asking said, "Somebody who would join me and be like my parents." Given that these problems only occurred in English interviews these problems are likely due to language difficulties between the respondent and interviewer.

F32 Have you ever had a boyfriend or romantic partner?

Generally, respondents had no difficulty answering this question. While more respondents 18 and older reported having had a romantic partner, a handful of younger respondents also reported having romantic partners.

Respondents cited two reasons for why they had not had a romantic partner. The first explanation was that they were focusing on their education. A number of respondents explained that they felt that having a relationship would disturb their studies. Other respondents explained that they were too young to have a romantic partner. One respondent said, "I am too young to have a lover. My mum would beat me if she heard I had a girlfriend."

While some younger respondents discussed the topic without issue, a number of younger respondents appeared uncomfortable about discussing this topic. In a number of interviews interviewers noted that the respondent became visibly embarrassed or hesitant to discuss this topic. This was primarily observed in Chichewa interviews, but also occurred in one English interview.

Gender Attitudes

F33 Do you believe, it is right for a man to hit or beat his wife:

Respondents generally answered the questions in this series based on their own personal feelings, which is the goal of the question, rather than their own experiences or what they believed happens. While some respondents did mention what they witness or had experienced, they were able to separate these experiences from their personal beliefs in responding to these questions.

A) If she goes out without telling him

In discussing this question, respondents discussed a wide variety of attitudes towards a man hitting or beating his wife if she goes out without telling him. A number of respondents explained that they did not view hitting or beating their wives as acceptable under any circumstance. A number of respondents held a similar view, but added that they felt that husbands and wives should talk about issues that they have rather than fighting. Other respondents, felt that there were certain circumstances where it would be okay for a man to hit his wife for leaving the house without permission. Several respondents explained that they would ask questions when the wife came home and explained that there are some circumstances where this would be acceptable, such as if the wife left the house to get food or if the husband was not at home when she left. These respondents also explained that if the wife had not left the house for these types of circumstances, then they felt it was acceptable for the man to hit his wife. Finally, a number of Chichewa respondents felt that it would be acceptable for a man to hit or beat his wife if she left the house without permission. Respondents who held this belief generally explained that this meant that the wife was having sex with other men or misbehaving in some other way. As one respondent explained that if the wife left the home without the husband's permission then this would be an act of defiance. This respondent added, "She must have a hidden agenda and must pay for it."

B) If she ignores the children

As with the previous question, a number of respondents mentioned that they did not feel that this would be acceptable, while others explained that the husband and wife should discuss the problems rather than resort to violence. However, several Chichewa respondents said that they felt it would be acceptable for a husband to hit or beat his wife if the wife ignored the children. Respondents generally explained that children are important for the future and therefore they viewed it as being extremely important for the wife to take care of the children. One such respondent explained, "...children are an investment for the future and they can even become key players in government, hence it is important to take care of them fully." Another respondent stated, "Children are a precious possession and as such they need to be take care of... they should not suffer."

C) If she argues with him

The vast majority of respondents explained that they did not view this as an acceptable reason for a man to hit or beat his wife. Some respondents explained that if the husband or wife are fighting they should seek a third party to help them resolve the conflict, while other respondents explained that the couple should simply talk about issues. Two English respondents did state that they did believe this was an acceptable reason for the husband to beat his wife, but in both cases interviewers noted that they had language difficulties that may have led to the respondent misunderstanding the question.

D) If she refuses to have sex with him

The majority of respondents felt that a wife refusing to have sex would not be an acceptable reason for the husband to beat the wife. A number of respondents mentioned that there may be a good reason that the wife might not want to have sex with her husband, such as having an illness that she does not want to transmit to the husband. Other respondents explained that they felt that the husband should talk with the wife to understand why she does not want to have sex. While the majority of respondents did think that this was not an acceptable reason for a man to beat his wife, one respondent did think this would be acceptable. This respondent explained that when the wife married her husband she was promising to have sex with him and so when she does not do so then she is ignoring the rules of marriage.

E) If she makes bad food

This question proved to be particularly problematic for Chichewa respondents, who generally understood “bad food” as meaning food that was not properly or fully cooked. A number of respondents explained that it might not be the wife’s fault that she prepared “bad food” due to firewood shortages, and because of this husband’s should be more understanding about this issue. This issue is likely due to translation issues. Additionally, a number of respondents simply laughed when they heard this question and explained that they did not view this as a reason for a man to beat his wife.

F34 Do you believe:

A) Men, not women, should decide when to have sex

A number of respondents felt that it was the man who decides when to have sex. The majority of respondents explained that this is the man’s responsibility because he is the head of the household. Respondents who said they did not believe this did not generally provide any reason that they believed this.

A number of respondents felt uncomfortable because of this question. Interviewers noted that respondents looked away or were hesitant to answer the question. One respondent stated, “I have never done this and I am not there when people are doing it.” A different respondent asked, “How would I know, I’m just a kid?”

B) Men need more sex than women

A large number of respondents agreed with the statement that men need more sex than women. Few patterns emerged in reviewing respondents’ explanations for this view, but most responses simply reiterated the belief that men need more sex than women. As with the previous question, several respondents refused to answer this question on the basis that they do not know about these types of things.

C) Men need to have sex with other women, even if they have good relationships with their wives

A large number of respondents felt that it was acceptable for men to have sex with other women even if they had a good relationship with their wives. Respondents generally explained that men need more sex than women do, so this is why they need other women. This explanation could be due to the ordering of the questions.

D) Women who carry condoms have sex with a lot of men

The majority of respondents agreed with the statement that women who carry condoms have sex with a lot of men. Respondents’ explanations generally explained that women wouldn’t carry condoms unless they expected to have sex. One such respondent explained, “It would be weird for somebody who doesn’t have sex to carry condoms.” Additionally, a number of respondents, particularly in Chichewa, thought that carrying condoms meant that the women who carry condoms are looking to engage in prostitution. One such respondent stated, “Money is very important in peoples' lives and why would a woman carry condoms it is not for the desire for commercial sex.”

Respondents who disagreed with this statement explained that these women are just carrying condoms in order to protect themselves when they do have sex.

E) A woman should tolerate violence to keep her family together

Most respondents explained that they did not feel that this was acceptable and that if this is occurring the wife should seek help from marriage counselors or village chief. One respondent explained, “That’s what we are taught. That that the man is strong, that he has the last word. If he hits, you should just take it. But that is inhuman, it’s just not right.”

Respondents who agreed with this statement explained that keeping the family together was the most important thing, even if the wife has to accept violence in order to achieve this.

F35 Do you find it justifiable for parents to use physical punishment such as, smacking, slapping, hitting, or beating when a child behaves inappropriately?

Respondents were divided on whether the use of physical punishment is acceptable. A number of respondents explained that they viewed physical punishment as an acceptable way to discipline a child and a number stated that this is very common in Malawi. However, a number of respondents also explained that this should not be done because the child might be hurt or even killed.

F36 Do you think it is appropriate for a child to use violence in order to resolve conflicts?

While respondents felt that it was acceptable for parents to use physical punishment to discipline their children, they do not think that it is acceptable for children to resort to violence in order to settle differences. One such respondent stated, “When you are young, sometimes you don’t know how to behave and deal with other people, so you fight. But talking is the best and as you grow up you should learn this.”

F37 How much do you trust people living in the area in which you live¹ ... a lot, some, not too much, or not at all?

In order to answer this question, respondents had to decide what they considered to be their community and then decide what factors contribute to their trust or distrust of the people living in their community.

Respondents’ definition of community broke down into two different groups. The first explanation was focused on a specific geographic area, which respondents defined as their village or neighborhood. A smaller group of respondents explained that when they thought about their community this meant the people around them. For example, one Chichewa respondent explained that this meant “people from the same clan”. Another respondent explained that community meant “people from the same village”.

Respondents accounted for a wide variety of topics in deciding how much they trusted the people in their community. One topic that a number of respondents mentioned was their ability to trust people in their community with their secrets. One respondent explained, “Some people... they will reveal your secrets, so I trust very few people.” Another respondent explained that there is a lot of gossip in the area where they live. The topic of gossip and trusting community members with secrets was a topic that also emerged frequently in the Philippines when respondents were evaluating how much they could trust people in their community.

The topic of crime was also a topic that a number of respondents mentioned in considering how much they trusted the people in their community. Respondents cited this topic in order to explain why they did not place much trust in people in their community. For example, one respondent said that he could only trust people in his community “some” because sometimes when they come to chat with you at your house they steal things. Another respondent stated that some people in his community are thieves and he does not trust them.

In addition to the above themes, some additional themes emerged solely in Chichewa interviews. One such theme was the topic of community development projects. A number of respondents discussed community members’ participation in working on community development projects as a reason why they trusted them. One respondent who said she trusts community members “a lot” in part because community members work together on these types of projects. As with other themes that emerged with this question, respondents also mentioned this theme as a negative. Several respondents mentioned that they do not place much trust in community members because they do not participate in community development project.

Another topic that emerged exclusively in Chichewa interviews was the topic of village chiefs. A number of respondents evaluated how much they trusted community members based on their responsiveness to village chiefs. For example, one respondent explained that she “believes” in the people around her a lot because when a chief calls “they all go”. A different respondent explained he does not trust people in his community “too much” because community members do not respect the village chief and do not follow his commands.

F38 How safe do you feel in the area in which you live... very safe, somewhat safe, or not safe at all?

In moving along to thinking about their safety, in some cases respondents shifted the way they were defining their community. This was especially common among older respondents who were away at college. In the previous question (F37), older respondents tended to focus their answers on the area where they currently lived, but also made comparisons between their current home to their childhood home. Ultimately, the majority of respondents defined their community as the village or neighborhood where they live.

In evaluating how safe they feel, respondents discussed a number of aspects relating to their physical safety and their quality of life.

Respondents frequently mentioned the presence or proximity of their community to police stations or soldier barracks. All of the respondents who mentioned this theme answered that they felt either very safe or somewhat safe. For example, one respondent who stated that he only feels somewhat safe because there are “a lot of robbers” in his village, but stated that he feels somewhat safe because the police station is located close to his house. Another respondent explained that she felt very safe because when any kind of crime occurred the police responded quickly.

Another theme that emerged in discussing this question was crime. Respondents who mentioned that there was little or no crime in their community tended to report that they felt safe in their community. For example, a male respondent explained that there is no theft in his community and said he feels safe because of this. While some respondents mentioned the lack of crime in their communities, others discussed the presence of crime to explain why they don't feel safe. For example, one respondent explained that he used to consider his community as being very safe, but now feels that it is only "somewhat safe" due to the increasing number of thefts in the area. Another respondent reported feeling very safe in their community because there are no violent crimes.

Another topic that frequently emerged in discussing this question was the access to education. For example, one respondent explained that he feels very safe because people in their community "allow and encourage" children to go to school. The respondent further explained, "I feel safe because our community is upholding our freedom of education..." Another respondent explained that she does not feel safe because her sister, who is her guardian, wants her to drop out of school in order to get married.

A pattern that emerged solely in Chichewa interviews was food security. Two respondents explained that they did not feel very safe due to food shortages. One respondent explained, "We sometimes do not eat because of a shortage of food." Another respondent stated that his family had not benefitted from a subsidy program and said, "This makes us vulnerable to hunger; we are not very safe."

Witnessing Physical Violence

F39a At any time in your life... did you see your parent get pushed, slapped, hit, punched, or beaten up by your other parent, or their boyfriend or girlfriend?

A number of respondents reported witnessing this type of behavior by their fathers. Respondents explained that their fathers would come home drunk and then would hit their mothers. Another respondent answered yes, but then explained that he was away at boarding school most of the time, but he thought that his father had hit his mother on several occasions while he was away.

F39b At any time in your life... did you see a parent hit, beat, kick, or physically hurt your brothers or sisters, not including a spanking on the bottom?

A number of respondents stated that they had seen this because it is a fairly common form of punishment in Malawi. Some respondents reported that their parents would hit their siblings, while others reported that their parents would beat their siblings with a stick.

One problematic issue with this question was the use of the term “spanking”. This was not a word that respondents were familiar with in English. Additionally, when this term is translated into Chichewa, it has more of a sexual connotation, rather than something that is done as a form of punishment.

F39c At any time in your life... outside of your home and family environment, did you see anyone get attacked or hit on purpose with a stick, rock, gun, knife or other thing that would hurt?

The majority of respondents indicated that they had seen someone outside of their home attacked with a weapon. This question appeared to be easy for respondents to answer quickly and accurately. Additionally, a majority of respondents cited the types of events that this question is attempting to capture; however, some of the responses are potentially outside the scope of what this question is attempting to capture. One example of a likely out of scope answer comes from a respondent who explained that he sees two children at the house next door who frequently fight while the parents are away at work. Another respondent explained that on many occasions he has seen parents beat their children with a stick as a form of punishment. Ultimately, this question should be tailored based on the type of events that this question is attempting to capture.

F39d At any time in your life... did you see anyone get attacked on purpose without using an object or weapon?

A number of respondents reported that they had witnessed this. A number of respondents explained that they had witnessed people fighting in the streets or at the market. Other respondents reported seeing neighbors fighting in their village.

During probing, it was discovered that one respondent had seen a fight at school, but she did not include it in her answer to this question because she did not view it as being “serious”. The respondent said she did not view it as serious because nobody got hurt. It is possible that other respondents are underreporting witnessing violence for similar reasons.

Physical Violence

The next questions are about parents or other adult relatives. Remember, you can ask to skip any question that you do not want to answer.

F147a Has a parent or other adult relative ever: punched, kicked, whipped, or beat you with an object?

The vast majority of respondents understood this question as asking about punishment, regardless of whether they had ever experienced this type of violence. For example, one respondent answered yes to this question because he was “hit on the bottom” with a stick when he did not follow his mother’s instructions. Another respondent explained that he was “whipped” when he misbehaved and was expelled from school. Respondents who answered that they had not experienced this type of violence also mentioned punishment in discussing this question. A female respondent explained that her parents sometimes hit her as punishment, but that it was always with their hand and not with an object. Another respondent who answered no to this question said that his parents always talked to him rather than hit him when he did something wrong. Respondents who did not state that the violence that they experienced was a form of punishment usually did not know why a parent did this.

While the majority of respondents said that the violence that they experienced was a form of punishment, a few respondents reported that they felt that this violence was justified. One such respondent said, “... this is violence but a way of making us behave better.” While these respondents still answered yes to this question, it is conceivable that other respondents might not depending on their understanding of this question.

F147B Has a parent or other adult relative ever: choked, smothered, tried to drown, or intentionally burn them?

Five respondents ultimately answered yes to this question. Three of these respondents reported that a parent or adult relative had burned them, while two said that a parent or adult relative had tried to drown them.

Respondents struggled to share many details regarding why they had been burned, but one respondent was able to explain that this was done as a punishment. The respondent stated that she had broken something in their house and did not apologize, so her mother decided to burn her as a form of punishment. Additionally, one respondent who later explained that he had burned (during the follow up series for F147a) stated that his mother had hit him with a stick that had been in the fire. The respondent explained that he did not answer yes to this question because he did not believe that his mother intended to burn him.

Among the two respondents who had been held underwater, one stated that this was a form of punishment while the other was unsure of why this was done to him. The respondent who was unsure of the reason explained that a “distant relative” had held him underwater until the respondent’s friend told the relative to stop. The relative had stated that he was trying to teach the respondent to swim. The other respondent explained that he was “dipped in water” several times by his uncle as a punishment. The respondent explained, “I was very troublesome when I was young I used to beat up other kids and he put me in water so that I should stop the bad behavior.”

F147C Has a parent or other adult relative ever: used or threatened you with a knife or other weapon?

Four respondents reported that a parent or adult relative had used or threatened to use a weapon against them. One difference that emerged between these four respondents was the way that they understood what constituted a weapon. While two respondents focused on a knife, one respondent explained that his uncle who was drunk at the time had tried to hit him with a glass bottle. Another respondent explained that they answered yes to this question because her mother had beat her with a stick, which she felt was a weapon. Ultimately, the wording of this question may need to be tailored to better fit the true intent of this question.

F148 How many times has a parent or other adult relative punched, kicked, whipped, or beat you with an object: once, a few times, many times?

Respondents were generally able to estimate the number of times that they had been hit and then fit that number into one of the response options without difficulty. As would be expected, respondents who reported that these types of abuse had occurred either once or many had a relatively easy time answering this question. Ultimately, respondents who had only experienced this form of abuse a handful of times only had one remaining response option to select.

F150 How old were you the last time this happened?

The majority of respondents were able to easily provide an estimate for the age when this form of abuse had occurred. Most respondents were able to recall what grade (in Malawi this is called a form), which then allowed them to estimate the age they were when the event occurred. While most respondents were able to recall this information, one respondent was ultimately unable to recall how old they were when this occurred and answered the question by saying it was “a long time ago”. The cognitive burden of this question could be reduced by providing the response categories. As the question is written, most respondents try to provide a precise age when the event occurred.

F151 What was the relationship to the parent or adult relative who did this to you this last time?

Respondents were able to recall this information without difficulty; however, a number of English respondents had difficulty understanding what this question was asking. For example, one respondent thought that the question was asking about the relationship was with the perpetrator and the respondent answered by saying, “It was ok.” Several other English respondents had to ask for clarification in order to answer the question.

Another issue arose with this question when several respondents explained that more than one person had done this to them. A number of respondents explained that both their mother and father did this to them the last time; however, as the question is currently formatted interviewers can only record one answer.

F154a Did you experience? Cuts, scratches, bruises, aches, redness or swelling or other minor marks?

F154b Did you experience: Sprains, dislocations, or blistering?

F154c Did you experience: Deep wounds, broken bones, broken teeth, or blackened or charred skin?

All respondents that indicated that they had received injuries answered yes to this question. Most respondents explained that they had redness, swelling, or scratches as a result of this abuse. Two respondents said that they had experienced sprains, dislocations, or blistering as a result of this abuse. Additionally, two respondents indicated that they had experienced blackened or charred skin. When interviewers followed up on this question, one respondent indicated that they had blackened skin due to bruising, which is why they said yes to this question. Another respondent indicated that they had been hit with a stick that had been taken out of a fire, which is how he was burned.

F156 How old were you the first time this happened?

Similar to previous questions that required respondents to provide an age when the event occurred, respondents utilized a number of strategies in order to estimate the age they were. Some respondents were able to recall what grade they were in and then estimated an age based on that, while other respondents use memorable life events to recall the age when an event occurred. For example, one respondent explained that he remembered that an event occurred around the time when his family moved, which he said happened when he was 4. Other respondents said that they were too young to remember the first time and the interviewer ultimately recorded that this occurred between zero and five. Ultimately, providing the response options will allow more accurate reporting from respondents.

F159 This first time when parent or adult relative punched, kicked, whipped, or beat you with an object, did you receive any injuries?

The majority of respondents did not have difficulty answering this question; however, one Chichewa interview was not sure how to define injury. The respondent explained that he had some swelling in the areas where he had been hit, but the respondent did not consider this to be an injury. The respondent explained that he felt injuries meant more serious problems, such as open wounds, fractures, or dislocations.

F163 How old were you the last time this happened?

In answering this question, one respondent estimated that he was ten years old the last time this had occurred, while another respondent was unable to recall the most recent time that this had occurred.

F187 The next questions are about other people who are in the area where you live. This includes such people as teachers, police, religious or community leaders, friends, classmates or even strangers.

F187a Has one of these people ever: punched, kicked, whipped, or beat you with an object?

Due to concerns about the length of interviews, interviewers did not probe extensively on this question; however, in the brief discussions a number of respondents indicated that they had been physically hit or beaten at school by teachers or their headmaster. Respondents who said that they had experienced this type of violence at school stated that it was used as a form of punishment. A number of students stated that they experienced this type of violence when they were late for school. For example, one respondent explained that she was late coming back to class after break time and the teacher hit her with a ruler. A Chichewa respondent explained that once when they were late for class, the teacher hit them with a stick. Other respondents explained that being hit was simply a generic punishment that was used at their school. One such respondent explained that at her school, students “get whipped and things like that” as a form of punishment.

While the majority of respondents focused their answers on physical violence that they received from teachers, a small number also mentioned experiencing physical violence from their friends during arguments. For example, one respondent explained that he had gotten in a physical fight with a friend, but could not recall the reason that they had gotten in this fight.

F187b Has one of these people ever: choked, smothered, tried to drown you, or burned you intentionally?

Only one respondent answered yes to this question. The respondent explained that he was fighting with a friend at a dam when this friend was hitting him as well as holding him under water. The respondent explained that this was the same event that caused him to answer yes to question F187a.

F187c Has one of these people ever: used or threatened you with a knife or other weapon?

A few respondents stated that they had experienced this type of violence in their community. Two respondents said that they had been threatened with a knife. In one instance, the respondent explained that he was sent to the grocery store by his mother and that while he was walking to the store a stranger approached him with a knife and demanded his money. The respondent was able to get away without injury. Another respondent was on his way home from a ball when he explained that he was threatened by strangers who the respondent described as “thugs”. The respondent explained that he answered yes because the strangers were sharpening their knives. One additional respondent indicated that he had been “threatened and accosted” many times by strangers as well as by friends. This respondent explained that most of the people in his village carry large knives with them at all times, but stated that they never actually used these knives.

One additional respondent answered yes, but the event that caused this respondent to answer yes to this question are likely outside the scope of what this question is intending to capture. The respondent stated that she was thinking of a male teacher who had hit her with her ruler because she was late getting to class, which she reported in F187a.

Physical Violence Services

F233 Thinking about all your experiences with physical violence, did you know of a place to go and seek professional help?

This series of questions proved to be some of the most problematic questions in the entire questionnaire for a number of reasons. The most common problem that respondents had with this question was the fact that a number of respondents either did not understand or did not hear that the question asks about professional help. A number of respondents, in both English and Chichewa, answered yes to this question and then explained that they could speak with relatives or friends.

Additionally, this question along with other question in this series, assume that respondents interpret their experiences as being physical violence. Several respondents indicated that they did not consider what they had experienced to be serious enough to constitute violence. One such respondent explained that if she had felt that it was serious she could go to the police, but she did not view her experiences as being serious enough to warrant that.

F234 Did you try to seek professional help for any of these incidents?

During follow up probing, interviewers learned that a number of respondents who answered yes to this question had not in fact sought professional help, but had instead told their parents or other relatives. Additionally, one respondent explained that she had not sought help because the violence occurred when she was younger and was unaware of community resources to help with these type of problems. This respondent explained that if these incidents happened now that she would know where to go.

F235 What was the main reason you did not try to seek professional help?

The majority of respondents reported that they either did not need or want help. Other respondents cited fears that they would be abandoned or that their parents would be arrested if they reported the violence.

F236 Did you receive any professional help for any of these incidents?

All respondents who reported receiving any form of professional help explained during probing that they had spoken with family members about the issues.

Emotional Violence

F300a Has a parent or someone like a parent ever: Told you that you were not loved, or did not deserve to be loved?

A few respondents indicated that they had been told this. The majority of these respondents explained that this is something that had been said to them in anger or in the heat of an argument, rather than something that they are told on a regular basis. One respondent explained that he had been told this when he and his mother had argued and he said that she told him that she didn't love him, but he said that he did not truly believe this because she said it during an argument. Additionally, a few respondents explained that they had heard these things said to other children, but said that their parents had never said anything like this to him

F300b Has a parent or someone like a parent ever: said they wished you had never been born or were dead?

As with the preceding question, most respondents who answered yes to this question explained that this was something that their parents had said to them during an argument. Additionally, a few respondents answered yes to this question who shouldn't have. One such respondent answered yes because she said that he sister had told her this. In order to minimize this type of error in the final version of the survey, interviewers should always read them stem of this question to remind the respondents that this question is only asking about a parent saying these things.

F300c Has a parent or someone like a parent ever: Ridiculed you or put you down (for example saying that you were stupid or useless).

A number of respondents stated that they had been told that they were stupid or useless. Respondents reported that they had been told these things for a wide variety of reasons. One respondent explained that his parents tell him that he is stupid when he makes a mistake. Another respondent said that his mother will say this type of thing to him when she gets frustrated with him. The respondent added, "I guess it is her way of venting off her anger."

As seen in F300b, one respondent answered yes, but explained that a friend had said this to her. The respondent explained that one of her friends says this to her because the friends wants her to smoke. When the respondent tells her friend that she does not want to, the friends tells the respondent that she is stupid.

Additionally, a number of English respondents did not understand the word ridiculed or the phrase “put you down”. Respondents were able to explain that once they heard the example of being told that they were stupid or useless, they were able to determine what this question was asking.

Sexual Behavior

F400 The next questions are about sexual activity. By sex, we mean vaginal, oral, or anal sex. Have you ever had vaginal, oral, or anal sex?

In discussing this question, respondents mentioned a variety of topics. A majority of respondents explained that sex was something that occurred between a man and a woman. A 15 year old, English respondent stated that sex is “when a man and a woman sleep together and have intercourse.” A 13 year old Chichewa explained that he understood sex as meaning “a man and woman making love”. A 19 year old female respondent explained that to her sex meant “relations between a boy and a girl”.

Another theme that was mentioned a few times was an explanation that sex was something that was for married people. For example, when a 19 year old male respondent was asked this question he explained that “this was not the right time to be doing such things”. The respondent elaborated by explaining that he would have sex once he gets married to a woman. Another respondent explained his understanding of sex by stating, “When a boy and a girl sleep together as sexual intercourse.” However, this respondent quickly explained that the boy and the girl are usually married when they had sex. Respondents commonly discussed sex similarly to this respondent by explaining that it was between a man and a woman who are married.

Finally, some respondents also explained sex in biological terms. For example, one respondent did not want to elaborate about sex beyond saying, “The mating of male and female gametes. That is all.” Another respondent explained that sex is what she had learned in her Biology class as “the fusion of male and female gametes”. This pattern of interpretation only presented among older respondent who had been exposed to higher level Biology.

A number of issues also emerged with this question. The primary issue that emerged was the difficulty for younger to discuss the topic. A number of respondents, primarily younger respondents, seemed to withdraw or become extremely shy when the topic of sex was mentioned. One respondent even hid her face when the topic of sex was mentioned. Additionally, this issue was much more present in Chichewa interviews than English interviews; however, this could be due to the fact that the majority of Chichewa interviews were with younger respondents. This issue could also be due to interviewer effects. All of the Chichewa interviewers were male and it is possible that some of the female respondents may have not felt comfortable discussing the topic of sex with a male interviewer.

Another issue that arose was the fact that respondents claimed that they had no knowledge of “other forms of sex” other than vaginal sex. CSR interviewers noted that the Chichewa word for oral and anal sex is simply not used. CSR interviewers also noted that this the subject of anal and oral sex is also a difficult topic to discuss due to cultural sensitivities and ongoing national debates regarding homosexuality. The difficulty in discussing these topics manifested in a variety of ways. A number of respondents, particularly in Chichewa, reported that they were not aware of other forms of sex except for “heterosexual sex”, which means vaginal sex. Other respondents simply refused to discuss the topics at all. One respondent refused to discuss the topic at all, explaining that she had not had sex because she is still a student. In a few cases, English interviewers noted these problems, but not to the same extent as Chichewa interviewers. Additionally, one English respondent reported that she had engaged in oral sex.

F401 How old were you when you had sex for the very first time?

The majority of respondents reported that they were between the ages of 14 and 17 when they first had sex; however one respondent reported that she was 5 years old the first time she had sex. This respondent later explained that a neighbor who was watching her had molested her. It was unclear how she determined she was five years old at the time. Other respondents reported that they recalled the age because they were able to recall what grade they were in at the time and use this to provide an age.

F402 The first time you had sex, was it because you wanted to or because you were made to?

Of the four respondents who reported that they had had sex, two stated that they had had sex because they were made to. As mentioned in the previous question, one respondent reported that they had been molested at a young age. The other respondent explained that he felt he had been forced to have sex because his friends pressured him to have sex. The respondent was not physically forced to have sex, but reported that he felt extreme social pressure to do so.

F403 The person with whom you had sex the first time, what was their relationship to you?

Of the two respondents who reported that they had wanted to have sex, one reported that the first time they had sex it was with their girlfriend, while the other reported that it was with a friend who was a girl. The respondent who had had sex with a friend explained, “We were watching a [pornographic] movie, and we wanted to try the things we saw.”

F409 In your life, how many sexual partners have you ever had?

Of the three respondents who reported that they had had sex, three respondents reported that they had only one sexual partner. The additional respondent reported that they had had three sexual partners; however, during probing the interviewer learned that she had not actually had sex with one of these people, but had been molested by this person.

Sexual Violence: Money, Goods, or Favors Exchanged for Sex

F500 Have you ever received food, favors, or any gifts in exchange for sex?

All respondents reported that they had never received any food, favors, or gifts in exchange for having sex. Two respondents did report that she had been asked to do this. The first respondent said that a man that she did not know asked her to have sex with him in exchange for airtime for the respondent’s cell phone. The respondent stated that she went home and told her mother, who handled the situation. Another respondent reported that her primary school teacher had asked her to sleep with him. The teacher promised that the respondent would be the top student in her class and that he would pay her money. The respondent refused and she reported that she had been punished by being forced to clean toilets at the school and that she received extra homework.

A number of respondents did state that they had “heard of” people having sex in exchange for food, favors, or gifts. Several of these respondents reported that they had heard about classmates who have sex with teachers in exchange for better grades. One college age respondent stated that people at her college call it “STG”, which stands for sexually transmitted grades. The majority of respondents who said that they had heard of people having sex in exchange for good grades tended to be older, primarily college-age respondents. Respondents also mentioned that they had heard of people having sex in exchange for money. One respondent said that he felt this was “common practice” in his village. Additionally, one respondent in discussing this question said that she had heard of prostitution occurring but that she had never been asked to do anything like this. It is important to note that the high number of respondents, in both English and Chichewa, stating that they had “heard of” this type of behavior, but then stating that they had not engaged in it or been asked to engage in it, could be symptomatic of social desirability bias. This type of bias occurs when respondents feel the need to edit their responses in order to avoid revealing sensitive information.

A number of interviewers also probed respondents asking them what types of items they identified as gifts or favors. Respondents frequently cited clothing as examples of gifts, while respondents primarily identified having sex in exchange for better grades as being an example of a favor. Additionally, a number of respondents mentioned that they felt that food could also be another example of a gift.

Two respondents were confused by this question due to difficulty differentiating gifts that they had received from a romantic partner versus gifts or favors they received from someone who was not a romantic partner. One respondent said, “It’s like giving someone a watch with the aim of having sex with them. Like when you give a girlfriend a gift.” It should be noted that both respondents who had this difficulty were interviewed in English, and this error could be due to language issues.

Sexual Violence: Non-Contact Sexual Violence

F600a Has anyone ever.. Forced you to watch sexual activities or sexual abuse, even without making you participate.. For example images, photos, videos, or online?

Two respondents reported that they had been forced to view pornography. Respondents varied greatly in the way that they interpreted “forced” in the context of this question. In one case, a female respondent reported that an older, male neighbor had forced her to watch a pornographic video before the neighbor would allow her to leave. The respondent said, “I was at his house and he made me watch it with him.” A male respondent explained that one of his friends was pornographic material on their cell phone and that sometimes his friends watch this as a group. The respondent said that the first time he watched this video, but since then he said that he steps away when they begin watching. While this respondent was not physically forced to watch these videos, he does feel social pressure to do so. Additionally, another boy who answered no said that he had seen a pornographic video on a friend’s cell phone, but the respondent walked away when he realized what he was seeing. This respondent explained that he did not feel this constituted being forced to watch the pornography. Another respondent reported that they do repair work on cell phones and that sometimes he sees pornographic materials on clients' phones. The respondent answered no to this question because he inadvertently sees this material and nobody forces him to see it. Several other respondents also reported that they had seen pornography, but answered no because they had chosen to view the material. Ultimately, the fact that respondents' interpreted the word "forced" in such broad terms for this question could potentially capture unintended cases.

Sexual Violence: Sexual Abuse

In conducting interviews, it was discovered that the topic of sex is considered to be particularly sensitive and private. Because of this, only a limited number of respondents felt comfortable enough discussing the topics in this series of questions. It also should be noted that respondents who were interviewed in English, seemed much more willing to speak with candor about their sexual experiences compared to respondents who were interviewed in Chichewa. This could be due to age differences between the Chichewa and English respondents.

Additionally, the repeated use of the words vaginal, oral, and anal sex was found to be problematic, particularly in Chichewa. This was particularly common with younger respondents, but also with some of the older respondents as well. Interviewers also noted that it felt awkward and unnecessary to repeat the phrase with all of the questions. This was particularly heightened by cultural sensitivities in Malawi where sex is solely construed as vaginal sex. Additionally, anal and oral sex is principally thought of as homosexual activities and homosexuality is currently banned by Malawian law. Thus by repeating vaginal, oral, and anal multiple times in this series of question likely makes the questions overly dramatic; however, defining the term "sex" may be important to help respondents understand what should be included in their responses. This may be particularly important in cultures given that what constitutes can vary greatly between countries.

F700 Has anyone ever touched you in a sexual way without your permission, but did not try and force you to have sex?

Six respondents stated that they had been touched in a sexual manner without their permission. All respondents stated that the perpetrators were people that the respondents knew and the majority of perpetrators were making unwanted sexual advances. There were some distinct differences between the incidents that males and females reported in this question. Of the six respondents who reported experiencing this type of violence, two were females. One of these female respondents stated that a classmate at school had touched her breast. The other female respondent said that someone her age had touched her in a sexual way, but not in a "private place". The respondent told the boy to stop and he did. The four male respondents all reported that they had had female friends touch them in a sexual manner. One such respondent said that girls had tried to "seduce" him by touching and rubbing his arms and shoulders. Another respondent explained that he has had girls touch his chest and tickle his stomach, which made him feel uncomfortable.

F800 Has anyone ever tried to make you have vaginal sex, oral sex, or anal sex or tried to insert an object into your vagina or anus, but did not succeed?

Three respondents reported that someone had tried to make them have vaginal, oral, or anal sex. One respondent explained that she had gone over to a friend's house for what she described as "a simple chat", but that the friend wanted to have sex with her. The respondent said that she immediately left the friend's house and told him to leave her alone. Another respondent reported that a friend who wanted to date her insisted on escorting her home after school. The respondent explained that the friend then tried to force himself on the respondent, but that she fought him off by biting him. A male respondent reported that he has had a number of girls try to make him have sex with them. The respondent clarified that these girls did not try to physically force him to have sex, but that they did things like compliment him on his body, tickle him, and encourage him to have sex.

F900 Has anyone ever physically forced you to have vaginal sex, oral sex or anal sex or tried to insert an object into your vagina or anus and did succeed?

One respondent reported that she had been forced to have vaginal sex during her second year of college. The respondent reported that another student had wanted to date her, when she finally agreed he told her to meet him at his dormitory. The respondent said that he forced himself on her and said, "You're my woman now."

F1000 Has anyone ever pressured you in a nonphysical way, to have vaginal sex, oral sex or anal sex or tried to insert an object into your vagina or anus?

Five respondents reported that they had felt pressured to have sex. The majority of these respondents answered yes to this question because of peer pressure that they have experienced encouraging them to have sex. One such respondent explained that she answered that she had experienced this because she has friends who encourage her to have sex "because it's good". Another respondent explained that she answered yes to this question because people ask her out "over and over again". Other respondents who had not experienced this directly also mentioned people encouraging them to have sex with them. For example, one respondent explained that they felt that pressuring a person to have sex would include any situation where one person is asking the other person to have sex, but that they do not want to. The respondent added that the person might provide gifts in order to pressure the person to have sex.

F701 How many times in your life has anyone touched you in a sexual way without your permission, but did not try and force you to have sex?

The majority of respondents reported that this had only occurred once, so these respondents had no difficulty answering this question; however, respondents who had experienced this more than once had more difficulty coming to an answer for this question. In one instance, a respondent could not come up with a precise number and would only say "many times". Other respondents provided their best estimates for the number of times that this had occurred. One such respondent attempted to think about each instance when this occurred, but said that he was unsure if it had occurred three or four times. Another respondent simply responded that this had happened "plenty" of times, when the interviewer asked them to provide a number they took a few minutes and ultimately answered that they had occurred three times.

F801 How many times in your life has anyone tried to make you have vaginal, sex oral sex, anal sex or tried to insert an object into your vagina or anus, but did not succeed?

Only three respondents answered this question, and of these three respondents, two said that this had only occurred once. The third respondent could not come up with a numerical count for the number of times that this occurred, but simply said "many times".

F901 How many times in your life have you been physically forced to have vaginal, oral, or anal sex or physically forced to insert an object into your vagina or anus?

Only one respondent had been physically forced to have sex, and this respondent reported that this had occurred twice. Due to the extremely traumatic nature of this experience, it is not unexpected that this is a number that respondents would readily be able to provide; however, may be unwilling to provide.

F1001 How many times in your life has someone pressured you in a nonphysical way, to have vaginal sex, oral sex, or anal sex or inserted an object into your vagina or anus?

As with previous questions in this section, respondents who had only experienced this once had no difficulty answering this question while respondents who had experienced this more than once had more difficulty coming to an answer. Due to their interpretation of pressured, one respondent explained that this had occurred more than ten times. When the interviewer pressed for a number, the respondent could not provide a specific count. Another respondent could not provide a specific number, but simply said “many times”.

Sexual Violence Services

F1100 Thinking about all your experiences with sexual violence, did you know of a place to go and seek professional help?

F1101 Did you try to seek professional help for any of these incidents?

F1103 Did you receive any professional help for any of these incidents?

F1104a Did you receive help from: A doctor, nurse or other professional healthcare worker?

F1104b Did you receive help from: Police or other professional security personnel?

F1104c Did you receive help from: A lawyer, judge or other legal professional, other than police?

F1104d Did you receive help from: A social worker or counselor?

F1104e Did you receive help from: A helpline?

While a number of respondents reported that they had sought professional help, when they were asked who they had sought help from the majority of respondents said that they had talked with their families. Other respondents who said they had received professional help mentioned speaking with their teachers or a pastor.

Substance Abuse

F1300 In the past 30 days, have you used drugs such as marijuana, pills, ecstasy, yama or sniffed any chemical such as petrol or glue?

All of our respondents reported that they had not used any drugs in the last 30 days, and many said that they had never used any drugs; however, a number of respondents reported that they did know people who used marijuana. One respondent explained that marijuana was fairly common among kids in her village, particularly among boys. Another respondent stated, “That [marijuana] is very common, especially with the adults.” Other respondents were less familiar with marijuana, for example one respondent said that they had heard of it but did not really know much about it. Another respondent explained that marijuana was “a hallucinogen you can drink”.

F1301 In the past 30 days, on how many days did you drink alcohol to the point that you became drunk?

Only one respondent reported that they had been drunk in the last thirty days. The vast majority of respondents indicated that they did not drink any alcohol at all, and the majority indicated that they had never even tried alcohol. These behaviors were supported by statements that respondents made. For example, a female respondent said that women do not drink beer and said that “those who do, they then do not have genuine Malawian morals”. Another respondent simply said, “It’s bad to drink.” Even the respondent who reported that he had been drunk three times in the last thirty days stated that he had stopped drinking alcohol because his parents disapproved. Some respondents did report that they had friends who drink, but they stated that they themselves did not drink.

F1302 During the past 30 days, did you smoke cigarettes daily, occasionally, or not at all?

All respondents reported that they had not smoked cigarettes at all in the last thirty days and the majority said that they had never even tried smoking a cigarette. Similar to other substance abuse questions in this section, some respondents did report that they had friends or know people who smoke, but said that they choose not to smoke. One respondent commented, “There are health complications down the road. It’s just a fear in me—I can’t do it.”

Mental Health

F1303 During the past 30 days, how often did you feel the following ways: all the time, most of the time, some of the time, a little of the time, or none of the time?

These questions proved challenging to evaluate due to issues with the Chichewa translation and the fact that a number of English respondents did not understand the terms being used. Given the difficulties caused in the confusion caused by the translation issues, Chichewa interviewers only spent a limited amount of time probing these questions. The following sections of this question (A-F) focus primarily on English respondents. It should be noted that some of the confusion with these questions was as a result of language difficulties, particularly for respondents who completed the interview in English.

Additionally, a number of respondents struggled to differentiate between the response options, or even to remember them. A number of interviewers noted that they had to repeat the response options numerous times. Revising the response options for this question may reduce the cognitive burden for the respondent.

A) Nervous?

Respondents generally had no issues responding to this question; however, a few English respondents did not know the term. While a small number did not know what nervous meant, the majority of respondents were able to explain that nervous meant feeling anxious. One respondent explained this by explaining, “It’s when you don’t know what to do, and you’re under pressure from things like school or friends.” A number of respondents cited school as one place that they felt nervous, for example when they had to take an exam. Other respondents explained that you might feel nervous when you are with your friends.

B) Hopeless?

Respondents had more difficulty with this question, compared to the previous question. The majority of English respondents did not fully grasp what hopeless meant. For example, one respondent stated, “It means to not be happy.” Other respondents provided explanations that made it unclear whether they understood what was being asked. One such respondent explained that he felt hopeless because he had failed an exam recently, while another explained hopeless as “waiting for nothing”. While these explanations show that the respondents may have some level of understanding of hopelessness, it is unclear if they fully understood the concept.

C) Restless?

The majority of respondents did not understand what restless actually meant. A number of respondents thought that restless meant that someone does not feel well rested. One respondent who said she felt restless most of the time recently because, “I don’t really have time [to rest] because of school. I need to finish school and do well so I work very hard.” Explanations similar to this came from a number of respondents.

D) So depressed that nothing could cheer you up?

A number of respondents indicated that they had experienced some level of depression recently, but based on the explanations it is unclear if respondents understood the type of emotions that the question attempts to capture. For example, one respondent explained that recently he had “felt a little depressed” because he had been in a quarrel with his girlfriend. Another respondent explained that he had been depressed because he was nervous about how things were going at school.

E) That everything was an effort?

Respondents generally viewed this question as applying to their education. Several respondents, particularly in Chichewa, indicated that they had felt this was recently due to issues with their education. In English, respondents explained that they understood the words that were being used, but did not understand what was being asked of them.

F) Worthless?

A majority of respondents understood what this question was asking. One particularly articulate respondent explained that worthless means, “You completely see yourself as nothing...there is nothing you can do to benefit yourself or others.” Another respondent explained, “You completely see yourself as nothing.”

F1304 Have you ever intentionally hurt yourself in any way?

Two respondents reported that they had intentionally hurt themselves. In one instance a respondent explained that she did not want to go to school, so she attempted to hit herself on the foot with an axe; however, this went wrong and she ended up having a severe injury that kept her for 3 weeks. The other respondent explained that he had been depressed and felt very hopeless and had cut himself on his wrist.

F1305 Have you ever thought about killing yourself?

F1306 Have you ever tried to kill yourself?

In total, three respondents reported that they had thought about killing themselves. All respondents reported that at the time they felt sad due to circumstances in their life. Only one respondent reported that they had attempted suicide. This respondent stated that they had cut their wrists.

HIV/AIDS

F1307 Do you know what HIV/AIDS is?

All respondents reported that they knew what HIV/AIDS is, but respondents had varying levels of understanding regarding the disease. Some respondents simply explained that HIV/AIDS is a disease or a “bad disease”, while others gave a slightly more detailed explanation by saying that HIV/AIDS is “a disease that kills people”. Other respondents were able to provide additional details, for example several respondents stated that it was a sexually transmitted disease and several mentioned that there is no cure for it. A number of respondents also explained that there were ways to contract the disease in a non-sexual ways, such as through sharing needles or razor blades. One respondent was also able to explain that HIV is a virus that leads to AIDS.

F1308 Do you know any place where people could go for HIV testing?

F1309 Have you ever been tested for HIV?

Respondents generally had no problems identifying somewhere in their community where they could go for HIV testing. A number of respondents mentioned that hospitals and community health clinics provide free HIV testing. Additionally, some respondents answered that HIV testing was available at their school; however, during follow-up probing it was determined that this was a one-time event, rather than a location that provides HIV testing on a regular basis. Additionally, respondents had no difficulty recalling whether they had ever been tested for HIV.

F1310 What is the main reason you have never been tested?

Respondents provided a wide variety of reasons why they had never been tested for HIV, but the most common response was that they did not believe that they needed to be tested. Respondents frequently cited their age and their lack of sexual activity to explain why they did not need to be tested. Other reasons cited was that transportation was unavailable to a testing center and another respondent explained that they were afraid to get the results.

F1311 When was the most recent time you were tested for HIV: less than 12 months ago, 1-2 years ago, or more than 2 years ago?

Respondents did not seem to have any difficulty when they were tested and generally explained that being tested for HIV was a memorable experience, which was particularly true for respondents who had to go to a location for testing compared with respondents who had been tested as the result of a special event. For example, one respondent recalled that she was tested when she was living with her aunt and explained that she got tested because it was a requirement of her aunt’s workplace (a hospital) that all dependents get tested.

F1312 This most recent time you were tested for HIV, did you get the results of your test?

The majority of respondents who had been tested had gotten the results of their testing. Most respondents explained that they had verbally gotten the test results.
